red last Labor day in West Main street. Weimer, who was operating a jitney, was taking a party to the county fair when in attempting to avoid a collision with a trolley car, he turned out and struck Hall, who was standing at the rear of his express wagon handling a carboy of water. Hall received injuries which resulted in his death two days later. When court came in Friday morning, Michael Shea, an occupant of the jitney automobile driven by Weimer, was put on the stand by the defense. Shea testified that he was sitting on the door of the machine when it struck Hall. He said that apparently the automobile did not hit Hall forcibly as the express wagon, against which he was pinned did not move. He stated that Hall was held between the wagon and the machine and that when the machine was backed away he fell over. he fell over.

He was the last witness for the efense. State Attorney Hull then introduced some testimony given by Weimer at his former trial in Nor-wich after which both sides rested.

"The question of price maintenance is one of first importance," declared Mr. Holland, "because it concerns all of us as consumers. It must be considered in its broad ethical and social aspects as well as in its business and commercial features.

commercial features. It cannot be solved merely by considering it from the selfish point of view.

I am often asked of what value the principle of price maintenance is to principle of price maintenance is to the consumer. My answer is to ask what advantage the cut price system is to the consumer. No store can do business at a loss for any considerable time and stay in business. A certain profit must be made, the average must be maintained, and if one article is sold at a loss then some other article must be sold at a greater profit to establish the average so that the custablish the average so that the customer who buys all his drugs or all his groceries at a cut rate store will come out even at the end of the year. In other words, he gets a 50-50 split and has derived no benefit from the occasional low prices that he has enjoyed. The Standard Article.

"The consumer loses when standard article is driven from the market but the cut rates and this rethe market but the cut rates and this result will follow persistent cut prices. The consumer also suffers from the danger of substitution and from the higher prices that he pays under the mistaken notion that the store which sells one articles on the same basis. It costs a store a certain percentage to costs a store a certain percentage to do business, and this percentage does not vary much in various establish-

"It is against this form of adver-tising, advertising that is ethically unsound and is condemned by statutes of many states, that the principle of price standardization as exemplified in the Stephens bill is aimed. The Stephens Bill Explained. After explaining that the present only with the question of price main-tenance and had nothing to do with the Stephens bill, the speaker devoted con-
